Character is formed as the result of moral struggle, therefore temptation is an essential part of the battle for uprightness. It is only because of the possibility of deceit that honesty becomes a virtue. Temptation must be conquered in the mind. Character can be transformed for good or bad by the company you keep. Jesus developed his character through the temptations he conquered in submission to his Father's will, not by an inability to sin. Power is always accompanied by the temptation to misuse it, and the more power, the more temptation. He was tempted to use his power for selfish purposes, to protect himself from suffering, and to fulfill the expectations of the people and set up the kingdom then and there. His self-restraint kept him obedient to his heavenly Father.
